VICTORIA, July 23.—A. J. W. Kenyon well-known Victoria orchestra leader and his son, who were serving in the Canadian navy are re-united after a separation of four years. When A. J. was 18 months old he and his mother left Nanaimo, B.C., and went to Victoria where they lived each other. As a young boy Wiliard went to sea and was promoted to the rating of seaman which he held when he became 18. His son as a sailor had taken part in the same parade in Victoria as his father. "Northlanders are very conservative," he said. "The 1933 bill will be received by Mr. Fraser, who has confidence in him."

There is every indication that in the ridings of Northland and the eastern districts of the opposition with respect to Liberal policies particularly in respect to the depression, the dairymen are readying themselves on the Conservative side.

"Two seats in the Ottawa Valley, Lakeland and Northland, are to the government. Internal funds flow among the Conservative supporters here, but there is a number of dairymen who are returning against the reform party. They are largely seeking tranquility with the government."

Mr. Fraser, who is to speak at the meeting on Monday will register strongly for the Right, he said.

Resentment at the virtual abandonment of the party by which he himself was elected, was strong.

BENNETT SAYS KING IS DOWN FOR ALL TIME

Tory Leader Can See No Good Among Liberals

By THOMAS GREEN
Canadian Press Staff Correspondent

OTTAWA, July 24.—In making his annual speech of his campaign, Hon. R. B. Bennett, right-winger, declared that when a Prime Minister is chosen, he can't go wrong, and Britain says, "I stand by Great Britain."

Touching upon his advocacy in the House of Commons in 1929 for the New Zealand trade agreement that New Zealand part of the Commonwealth, he said: "Well, Mr. Bennett remarked, "when I went to see the King, he said, 'What do you think about the Empire?' I told him, 'I think it's time we had a Commonwealth of Nations.'"

The Conservative leader had referred to his reported speech of Premier King at Berlin, Germany, in 1929, in which the King had said: "The Minister for 'daring to try to impugn the Empire'."

King was surprised that it was Kerensky who had spoken for him.

"The King's father," said Mr. Kenyon to the six-foot-three dairymen, "and misunderstandings were swept away."

"What of these governments?" he charged. "They have borrowed funds and spent them back until the eve of an election! And the result is that they are distributing them."

"These men care little for party."

These would make us an adjunct of the United States," he said, and continued: "As in 1930, looking around for support, seeking to increase their influence and place and power and without any consideration of the principles of the Empire, says he is now for Empire trade."

Again, Mr. Bennett proceeded: "What do the Liberals mean by Empire trade? They want an Empire trade, but they would give a preference to the United States, and that is given to us."

King said in discussing the New Zealand trade agreement that New Zealand part of the Commonwealth, he said: "Well, Mr. Bennett remarked, "when I went to see the King, he said, 'What do you think about the Empire?' I told him, 'I think it's time we had a Commonwealth of Nations.'"

King was surprised that it was Kerensky who had spoken for him.

"The King's father," said Mr. Kenyon to the six-foot-three dairymen, "and misunderstandings were swept away."

But how he comes before the Canadian people and says, "I think it's time we had a Commonwealth of Nations," says and I say, "Exchange for Empire."

Colonial Unsound Bargain

The opposition leader charged that the vote of the Canadian people in the United States in 1932, in which the British preference was "flapping and wrapping around," was a "manifest violation of the principles of the Empire."

He continued: "The people of Canada are in no uncertain way and are waiting and straining to see what the result of this disapproving vote will be."

The Conservative party were the pioneers of Empire trade, the opposition charged.

"Now," he exclaimed, "Mr. King says we are not honest, and that is what I think of him. I am content to leave this question to the intelligence of the people of Canada, who will decide the election of 1931."

King had endorsed the new trade policy of the Canadian government, which would have made Canada a second rate nation.

The London bankers had endorsed his proposal, he reiterated. "They have given me a blank check," he said.

Continuing Mr. Bennett declared: "I know what I am doing. I am going to measure up to my mandate."

Mr. King, he said, had been placed on Hansard. The testimonial of the Canadian people, he said, will measure up to my mandate."

PEACE RIVER CITIZENS ARE AIR-MINDED

Pilot Craig, of Grande Prairie, Takes Up Passengers During Day

Exclusive to Edmonton Bulletin

PEACE RIVER, Alta., July 24.—The citizens of Grande Prairie, who have here gained an opportunity of seeing what not only citizens but country people demonstrated when Pilot Craig kept his plane in the air for 24 hours without landing until the sun was setting low over the mountains of Grande Prairie. The day was a record one for the city with an average accomplishment of 100 miles a day, and the sky almost cloudless. The hot spell has been broken by a cool wind from the north, and the rain has stopped. There are sections however, where the clouds are still hanging over the mountains, but the weather is improving.

The news for the new Municipal Council has been let to Captain Dougall, who has been elected to represent the city. He has been chosen to represent the city in the provincial election.

With the awarding of the contract for the new Municipal hospitals, the city has been awarded a new contract for the Wise Wife Who Plays Up to Her Husband's Peculiarities—Where Are the Beautiful Girls of Yesteryear?—She Who Gets Slapped

DEAR MISS DIX—I have been married six years to the man I love him slightly and that he is tired of me for the time being. We have three little girls and my husband isn't in love with any other woman. He has never been in love before because we have been too much together. He wants to get a present divorce because of the situation and save my husband and my home, and I feel sure that if I could get him to do it he would be a good man to work for (which I can always get) and buy up and looking like a young girl again, he would be a good man to work for. What do you advise? HE IS LIKE THAT. What do you advise?

MRS. H. D.

ANSWER: You have to deal with a man according to his temperament, and when a man is like that, he is not worth marrying. If he is married, she has found out the secret of how to make her marriage a success.

You seem to have done that, because when you say that you know how he reacts to you, you must be doing something right. For different husbands have to be treated differently.

There are men whom nothing appeals as fast as having their wives adore them, that they wives never think of any other man, and that they could not lose their wife if they tried to.

There are other men whose wives can only hold them by keeping them guessing, and that others men are uncertain of them, by making them believe that other men adore them.

There are other men whose wives' greatest hold on them is that they have habits with them. These men like their wives to stay put, never to leave them, and with them, and manifest much affection for their wives while they are alive, but when they are dead or when they are completely broken up because all their habits are broken up.

There are other men who get tired of their wives if they are too much trouble, and it is better to let them go. There are men who like to be fat or not, a certain amount of exercise, and there are men who like to keep the figure trim and supple. At this season of the year, however, it is best for the beauty-seeker to take some of her exercise out of doors, especially in the evenings, taking a walk, back riding, etc., give one the exercise she needs, and the many benefits of outdoor exercise, including in these sports seem incidental.

For indoor exercises the following will be helpful in reducing the hips and abdomen. Take front ten to twenty steps, then turn to the right and turn again at night.

1. Turn to the right, feet apart and hands out at the level of the shoulders. Turn the trunk to the right, bend the right knee straight and touch the right toe with your left hand. Turn the trunk to the left, touching left toe with right hand. Repeat.

2. Sit down on the floor with legs drawn up, feet flat on the floor. Get up. Grasp the ankles. Bending elbows outward draw your trunk round until the right shoulder is over the right knee. Repeat six times.

3. Sit on the floor, feet apart and hands clasped at back of neck. Twist trunk to the right and then to right, ten times each way.

4. Lie on your back and bring the right knee up to a sitting position. Slowly lie back again and repeat. Bring the left knee up to a sitting position in the same position both legs together; now open the legs in a V-shape, close and open ten times.

5. Sit on the floor, feet apart, bend the knees and lower the body to a sitting position. Slowly bring the arms forward and upward high, then bring them down and bring the arms down on rising. Repeat ten to twenty times.

Undoubtedly every reader will be able to think of other simple exercises, such as knee-bending, knee-twisting, knee-bending and the rest, which will help in reducing the hips and abdomen to reduce the hips and abdomen.

DANCING JUDITH.

BY CORALIE STANTON and HEATH HOSKEN

COPYRIGHT 1930 BY CHELSEA HOUSE

JUDITH GRANT
CHAPTER I

IT WAS a stormy night in mid-January. The pavements were swept by drenching sheets of rain, and a piercing wind was blowing.

In that cosmopolitan corner of New York called Greenwich Village the streets were almost deserted at 10 o'clock. From behind the closed blinds of the little cafes and drinking shops came bursts of music and laughter.

Halfway down the narrow street, Bastien Dumont, tumbling down the steps leading to the Cafe Ture, and pushing open the door, was met with a twang of a mandolin and a light, gay tenor voice singing "Funiculi, Funicula."

Bastien was Anglo-French, one of a score of struggling artists who frequented the little cafe. The place was something like a club for the indigent who would sip the wine of life, but who must have it cheap.

There were two rooms at the Cafe Ture—the first just below the level of the street, small and low ceiling, with the bar, the coffee urns, and a reed of bottles on the left; the second a few steps lower still, much larger, equally low in pitch, with sanded floor and some dozen tables, big and little, ranged round the walls. These walls displayed a collection of sketches, legacies from various artists.

One night a great man had sat there and laughed over his wine, and had turned and drawn a girl's head on the wall behind him. His had been a name to conjure with.

At the door the young man paused, blinking, and expelling a grateful breath.

"Pesta, what a night!" he exclaimed. Groping his way through the blue-gray fog to the shining counter, he shook the proprietor by the hand. "What a night!" he cried in a warm youthful voice. "It's Judy here!"

The proprietor returned Dumont's greeting and answered his question in the French language, which the young man had used.

"I have not seen Judy yet. M. Dumont, but she will doubtless be here. Chummy is in there." He jerked his thumb toward the inner room.

Dumont passed on, calling out a greeting here and there to friends who sat in smoke-enclosed groups. Between the two rooms the man who was singing to his mandolin rose and looked at him expectantly. This was Dan, the water and general factotum of the establishment—a bawky boy who looked like a clown in his baggy clothes.

Dumont ordered coffee and cognac, and entering the inner room, was noisily greeted by a crowd of men at one of the larger tables. Room was made for him, and he sat down among them.

A TABLE on the opposite side—

At the end of the room to the one at which Dumont had joined his friends, two men were seated at a table, most were occupied by heads of two and three.

Two other groups of couples were directed at the two men. For one thing, they were not habituals of the place, and it was known that strange visitors to the Cafe Ture, one of them, however, was known to be a rich man. He was Vincent Stornaway, a well-known postcard painter, who had long and a famous presence of a bohemian type. He excited curiosity with his faintly picturesquely dressed wife, a golden-haired, brown-headed, pale-faced, and healthy skin.

His complexion was known to no body, and various unfatiguing commentaries were passed on his appearance. He was uninteresting to a degree, his face being pale and thin, his hair gray, his eyes pale and small and sunken in puffy bags, his forehead low and square, and his right hand bent back so that it showed a hooked nose and a thick neck, and there was a sinister suggestion in the smile of his mouth. He was thin and porcine, and concluded which was the rest of his face.

"A hermit with a bad temper," said one of the older men, the crustiest caricaturist with the kindest heart in the world.

"Good old Tony," said another man, "the chap can't help it. As a matter of fact, Stornaway's companion was Bruce Gideon, a fine-looking fellow, though his paintings as at present on an innocent stage seemingly with which Gideon was

"That girl has a remarkable story," the artist said in a low voice, turning toward his companion so that his words could not be heard. "Do you think her beautiful?"

"Not exactly," Gideon answered.

"Too pale."

His voice kept low in imitation of the other man, was surprisingly soft—quite different from his appearance—and almost like a woman's appearance.

"She was considered the most beautiful girl in New York some years ago," the artist continued. He had seated himself on the glass-decorated veranda, and the artist had seated himself on the chair decorated wreath. "Chandler did this head of hers. She's like a statue there."

"Gideon, here is his biography in the dead master's work as he came in."

"Good Lord," he said. "You don't mean that same woman? What happened to her?"

"Love," replied Stornaway. "She fell in love with a boy who used to practice his harp here. Gideon, she was an artist. At least, he was trying to be an artist and starving meanwhile. It was one of those terrible passions. They were inseparable. You know, boy, boy apart."

She was working at Willoughby's art school. She was 18 at the time, and was a few years older. She's the daughter of an Englishman. I've forgotten his name—he died in Switzerland, climbing—I can't remember the name now. Her mother was dead long before."

Gideon turned, and his small eyes fastened on the young woman's face fair and fair.

"I thought she didn't quite fit in here," he said. "Go on, Stornaway. That's all."

"One day Alan Steyne disappeared—but that's without a word—but after that she was gone. She had to start again, and she was quite poor again. She was equal fonder of him. I used to come here often in those days, and I saw a good many more men than boys."

"What became of the fellow?" Gideon asked.

"She never knew—never heard of him. He was clever, but impulsive, and she never cared about going through the mill. He's never done anything in the way of writing or painting, but he's a good man."

The girl went to pieces again, and when she struggled back again she was even more fonder of him. She never minded since Alan Steyne left her. I don't know, how it's managed, but nobody seems to care about her."

"Do you mean she's mad?" asked the rich man with interest.

"Not exactly. Still, I should say she's quite crazy."

"And how does she live?"

"Everybody looks after her. In fact, she's the only person who does. At first she must have had a little money. She didn't seem to have any relatives. Little by little she began to add to her income, and when she struggled back again she was even more fonder of him. She never minded since Alan Steyne left her. I don't know, how it's managed, but nobody seems to care about her."

"She's been living with another girl—a girl they call Judy. Judy is more or less a socialite. She's been here. I don't come often. I was told me that she was looking for a home, and I think she's been staying with a friend of mine. I think she's also been staying with a queer, Savage-looking sort of a girl."

"How long ago did this happen?" Gideon asked.

"Let me see—about seven years ago. I suppose. You'll be five years since I used to come here. I should say she's quite a matron now."

"She's got a lot of money, I suppose. She's got a lot of go in her, but she's only a common little cat."

"I suppose she's got a lot of go in her, when the famous Chanley she's been married to."

"She's a decent girl, your love-sick moonbeam," said Gideon.

"Who do you mean?"

"Don't you know it's the rich man, the important man, the centre, I mean the other one?"

"What's he a sham?" asked Stornaway.

"That's what that girl should like him!"

"In my way, Chummy was quite a real man. You should have seen her when the famous Chanley she's been married to."

"She's a decent girl, your love-sick moonbeam," said Gideon.

"Don't you know it's the rich man, the important man, the centre, I mean the other one?"

"That's what that girl should like him!"

"In my way, Chummy was quite a real man. You should have seen her when the famous Chanley she's been married to."

"She's a decent girl, your love-sick moonbeam," said Gideon.

The sun goes down on Fundy's home, the tide is drifting home. Meantime, one now gone away, a mournful cry across the ocean. Where vagrant feet were wont to rove.

The river flows by like silver seas, and die.

The waves blossoms grow, and die.

And another leads her train along.

Where vagrant mares have sown.

For she who never more goes by.

And April comes with sun and shower.

But in May who sang her praise and reigned in each shining hour.

Heeding Spring's awakening day,

And his spirit's new rebirth.

He found a home, his solitude a room.

And thence the tide comes tide.

When April flings her magic wands,

When Autumn's panting galls

WHEAT SLIPS FRACTION ON 'PEG MARKET'

Export Business Increases But Bears Fail to Rally

WINNIPEG, July 23.—Advanced of corn on the Chicago market reacted more sharply than wheat yesterday, but wheat dropped fractionally after seeing early gains. The increased export business estimate, totalling 1,000,000 bushels, could not bring bears into line and wheat closed off 4¢ to 6¢ lower.

On the whole, however, buying in the pit was the lightest in weeks. The daily report of continuing dry weather in the prairies and extensive damage by rust to the crop was the main factor.

Screams on cash wheat were about 10¢ lower than on futures, while No. 5 wheat had showed a gain of 2½ cents. Demand for the cash market was generally strong, and wheat closely followed wheat's trend.
